control of anything ranging from someone's mobile device to national security servers. Hacking as we think of it today goes back to the early days of telecommunications when calls were first being handled by computer systems and the industry was moving away from human operators. The computers that made phone connections generated specific tones over the lines in order to communicate with one another. Early hackers would study these sounds and learn to manipulate the computers by replicating the tones, a technique that became known as phreaking. One of the best known phreaks was John Draper, who discovered a whistle that came in Cap'n Crunch cereal that combined just the right pitch and frequency to stop a phone recording and put the caller in operator mode, allowing him to make unlimited calls. And just like everyday life, there are good guys and bad guys. Criminal hackers, known as black hat hackers, will look for vulnerabilities in a computer system and use it to their advantage, for example, to block access to users, download information, or to deliver a malicious software. However, not all hackers are cyber criminals out to get you. In fact, there is a whole profession built around good or ethical hacking called penetration testing, which is the practice of testing a computer system's network or application to find vulnerabilities that an attacker could exploit. These ethical hackers are known as white hat hackers. The white hats are considered the ethical hackers, using their skills to protect companies from a criminal attack. They often work with security researchers by testing an organization's system for vulnerabilities. On the opposite end, black hats are what give the word hacker a negative connotation. They aim to exploit companies or individual devices for illegal gain. There is also a group known as gray hat hackers; they are not malicious but they might still operate outside the law. An example of a gray hat hacker might be a hacktivist that is engaged in political activism that they feel in, just even when they are breaking the law. Another type of hacker is the script kiddie, which is an unskilled person who uses existing computer code which they had no involvement in producing to hack into computers. Script kiddies demonstrate that a person doesn't even have to create their own code in order to hack. The main target for cyber criminals is typically an organization's servers. This is where most data is stored, and it is a jackpot full of sensitive data. Once inside, hackers can have a devastating effect on a company, from releasing private correspondence to stealing trade secrets. Everyone is vulnerable to hacking because everyone has connected devices today. We've come a long way from when it was only phone systems that were controlled by computers, and cereal box prizes could get free long distance calls. Today, a script kiddie can take the code that a Russian hacker developed and deploy a ransomware attack. It's not just big corporations that need to worry about hacking anymore, and that's why it's important to engage Advantage Technology to assess your information security risks today.

and stole for example credit card data This is the common image the media sketches of the hacker The somewhat more informed person might think that a hacker is not really a criminal but somebody with a lot of knowledge about computers and security Of course this second definition is a lot better than the first one but I still don't think it catches the essence of what makes one a hacker First of all hacking hasn't necessarily got to do with computers There have been hackers in the Medieval Ages and maybe even in the Stone Ages The fact that they used other means to express their skills and knowledge doesn't make them less than any hacker in the modern ages We are just blessed with the fact that at this moment we are all surrounded by technology a lot of people even are dependent of it
