

Urban Local Bodies in Madhya Pradesh

Madhya Pradesh is no exception to the general trend obtainable in the country as a whole in the field of local self-government in the post-independence period, though the state had to face some peculiar problems arising out of the re-organisation of states in India in 1956 and then in 2000. The new state of Madhya Pradesh, inherited a diverse legislation and administrative system from the former Bhopal and Vindhya Pradesh states, to the central state of Madhya Pradesh, the new state.

The developments in the field of urban local bodies in different regions comprising the new state, did not conform to the general trends in the field of local self-government. The state of Madhya Pradesh, inherited the traditions in the field of local self-government from the former states of Bhopal, Vindhya Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh. The following Acts of the Government of Madhya Pradesh were in operation in the state, and were also continued in operation in the new state:

- The Corporation Act, 1927
- The Municipal Corporation Act, 1946
- The Municipalities Act, 1954
- The Municipalities Amendment Act, 1952 gives local bodies a constitutional status, assigned them a number of functions (Annexure 'I'), ensures their stability, provides a suitable machinery for election with greater freedom and also makes institutional arrangements for co-operation of local bodies with the Government to meet the constitutional requirements. To meet the constitutional requirements, the Government made necessary amendments in existing legislations relating to local bodies in the state. Under the new dispensation, three types of urban local bodies have been set up in the state:
 - Municipal Corporations to be created in the urban areas.
 - Municipal Councils for small towns.
 - Nagar Panchayats for urban areas with less than 20% population. These are transitional bodies from rural to urban.

The new state of Madhya Pradesh has 14 Municipal Corporations, 85 Municipal Councils and 235 Nagar Panchayats. The Chhattisgarh state has 4 Municipal Corporations, 18 Municipal Councils and 46 Nagar Panchayats.

The following table presents the different types of urban local bodies, their population and percentage share of each type in total urban population in the re-organised state of Madhya Pradesh : (2001 Census).
