successes and failures contained in Craven's extensive filmography ultimately revealing a variegated portrait of his career. Scholars of film studies, horror, and ecology will find this book particularly interesting. Hare, Hare, What You Doing There? Robert M. Twedt, 2002-09-26. This memoir is the story of growing up in a Norwegian American family in the hard times that followed the great depression of 1929. It is much more than that, however, for it describes the many often bewildering changes in the relationship of a boy with his father. Alternating between the ecstatic heights of hero worship and the heart-breaking disappointment that each disclosure of his father's very human faults brings about, the boy finds solace in books, fantasy, and trains. As he grows into adulthood, he learns to appreciate the difficult circumstances that constrict his parents' lives and their ways of surmounting them. In scenes both vigorous and tender, he experiences his father's willingness to sacrifice materially as well as emotionally in order to further his son's chances in life. The Department of State Bulletin, 1967.
