ENERGY PRICING POLICY FRAMEWORK AND EXPERIENCE IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mohan Munasinghe

INTRODUCTION

Today's societies require increasing amounts of energy for domestic, industrial, commercial, agricultural, and transport uses. These energy needs are met by the commercial energy sources including the short-term, depletable fossil fuel supplies — petroleum, coal, and natural gas — as well as the long term, renewable sources — hydroelectric, biomass, solar, geothermal, wind, and tidal power (Munasinghe and Schramm, 1983).

This paper sets out a consistent generalized framework for energy pricing in developing countries. The methodology seeks to maintain a compromise between analytical rigour and practicality. Because energy pricing is only one aspect of demand management and overall energy planning for national development, it is useful to first examine the role of pricing policy within this wider perspective.

PRICING POLICY AND INTEGRATED NATIONAL ENERGY PLANNING

Because of the many interactions and nonmarket forces that shape and affect the energy sectors of every economy, decision makers in an increasing number of countries have realized that energy sector investment planning, pricing, and management should be carried out on an integrated basis, e.g., within a national planning framework which helps analyse energy policy options ranging from a short-run supply-demand management to a long-run natural energy strategy (Munasinghe, 1983). However, in practice, most

Barnes, Kerry Krutilla, William F. Hyde, 2010-09-30 As cities in developing countries grow and become more prosperous energy use shifts from fuelwood to fuels like charcoal kerosene and coal and ultimately to fuels such as liquid petroleum gas and electricity Energy use is not usually considered as a social issue Yet as this book demonstrates the movement away from traditional fuels has a strong socio economic dimension as poor people are the last to attain the benefits of using modern energy The result is that health risks from the continued use of wood fuel fall most heavily on the poor and indoor pollution from wood stoves has its greatest effect on women and children who cook and spend much more of their time indoors Barnes Krutilla and Hyde provide the first worldwide assessment of the energy transition as it occurs in urban households drawing upon data collected by the World Bank Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme ESMAP From 1984 2000 the program conducted over 25 000 household energy surveys in 45 cities spanning 12 countries and 3 continents Additionally GIS mapping software was used to compile a biomass database of vegetation patterns surrounding 34 cities Using this rich set of geographic biological and socioeconomic data the authors describe problems and policy options associated with each stage in the energy transition The authors show how the poorest are most vulnerable to changes in energy markets and demonstrate how the collection of biomass fuel contributes to deforestation Their book serves as an important contribution to development studies and as a guide for policymakers hoping to encourage sustainable energy markets and an improved quality of life for growing urban populations
